The most followed military music group in the world, Six-String Soldiers is a five-member acoustic group performing Country, Americana and bluegrass music. The group was formed in 2015 by active-duty soldiers who were looking for ways to fulfill the Army's commitment to its soldiers and veterans.

They received national media attention after a Facebook video of the group playing The Beatles' "Here Comes The Sun" went viral. Since then, they have appeared on The Late Show with Stephen Colbert, Morning Express with Robin Meade, Harry with Harry Connick Jr., and Hallmark Channel's Home & Family show.

Based out of Washington, D.C., Six-String Soldiers travels the country playing in veterans home, at musical festivals, and service organizations such as the VFW, the VA, and the American Legion. They have performed and collaborated with country music legends and luminaries, including John Fogerty, Darryl Worley, and Mark Wills.

Their new album was recorded in Muscle Shoals and Nashville, and is expected to be released in 2020. The album is a reflection of their sense of duty and country, with a focus on service from military members and their families, police officers, firefighters and all those who wear a uniform.

"I'm making it my personal mission to get Six-String Soldiers on the Grand Ole Opry."
